The banner attraction of the exhibition season will be the appearance of the Adrian team of the Southern Michigan league, with Lee Taylor, fomuer Marion polo star, playing first base. On the 25th and 86th of April this team will be here, On the same dates an Adrian team will play at Mansfield but the first team, or regulars, will be sent here Overland Co, Head Does Not while Mansfield will get the Yanigans of the squad. Lee Taylor will positively appear at both games and his host of friends here will turn out en masse to see him in baseball as well as polo and a great career is predicted for him.

It is also quite likely that a series of two games will be arranged with the Akron team of the Ohio-Pennsylvanda league.

By April 17 when the opening game will be played the squad should be in first class shape and there should be some good baseball for the anxious fans. MANUEL, OF THE GUARDIA CIVIL

By CHARLES BRYANT HOWARD.

Close to the right bank of the Pasig iver, about two miles up from Manifa town, there stood a commodious and stoutly built "nipa" hut-rather larger than the others in the little "pueblo, and bearing a still greater resem blance to an exaggerated hairy bug-"Filipino," Manuel by name, and his heir next-door neighbor, and before I had been long a resident, I grew to be very much interested in the old couple.

The lady of the house was evidently an inveterate scold, and poor Manuel came in for a wigging every night, which generally commenced immediately after my arrival at home-partly for my benefit, I am inclined to by the Digger management that the think, for she invariably started off in badly pronounced Spanish, a lan-April 17 at which time Marion will guage which she rightly assumed 1 understood, relapsing into her native fast semi-pro organization, making Tagalan as her excitement increased, and culminating with a series of longdrawn and particularly uncouth yells. at the meaning of which I was onabled to make a fairly shrewd guess, for at this point Manuel generally came out, with a gait and attitude as of one propeiled from behind, frequently accompanied by a broom or other domestic utensil. Then he would light a cheroot and sit on the steps with his head in his hands, the picture of philosophical endurance, while the voice of the woman inside would gradually subside.

This entertaining program used to be carried out with great regularity, and I came to rather look forward to it as I rode home after business hours. Now and then it would be varied by sounds which were apparently caused by the upsetting of bamboo furniture and the hurling of various articles about the but's interior,

It eventually came to be a great that Manuel never, by word or deed, seemed to resent his better half's treatment, and I gradually began to have a feeling of something like contempt for the old chap, for, physically, he was a wonderfully fine specimen of his race, with an extraordinary muscular development, though I noticed that he was slightly lame, evidently from an old wound on his leg, for a dull white scar ran from knee to foot, contrastingly oddly with his dark brown skin. His wife was an active but wizened-up little creature.

One evening, when the old woman seemed to be in particularly good uproar and called to him: "Que ay, amigo?" (What is the trouble my

He glanced up wearfly. enor," he answered, in a tone which spoke volumes of resignation. I could not stand it any longer, and slipping on a "kimono," or Japanese wrapper, over my pajamas, went out to interview him.

"Buenas noches, senor," sald Manu-"Good evening," I replied,

Its get up. I will sit down also. "Thy wife is very fond of talking, Manuel," said I, by way of starting a conversation.

This very evident fact he admitted with a "Si, senor," 'Have you been married long?" hen inquired.

"Forty-five years, senor, "And has she always been so fond of talking?" said I, feeling like an infernal cad for my impertinence. But

Manuel did not seem offended, for he answered: "Si, senor, but not always in the one your grace has heard." This in nuch better Spanish than not own. I felt rather at a loss how to continue, and sat in silence for a few moments, while he puffed abstractedly Then I noticed the scar on his leg,

"Do you mind telling me how you eceived that sear, Manuel?" I asked. "No, senor," he replied, giving his eg t twist and gladeing down at it, hen he turned and looked at me from inder his heavy, yoke-like eyebrows. It is a long story, senor, but it will explain to your grace what your grace vould also probably like to knowvhy I do not resent the insults from tu-th-sat by 'majer,' which your grace has heard from the 'casa' of your grace

This was straight from the shoulder certainly, and "my grace" felt consid erably abashed for a moment under his steady gaze. Then, rather to my relief, he went on without giving me time to reply.

"Your grace has heard of the mu iny of the native troops in Cavite many years ago?"

I nodded, for I had not only heard of it, but had had nightmares after wards, based upon the recital.

"Long before that I was a soldier in the infantry, and I was in the regiment which was sent south to Min danao to suppress the 'Moro' aprising, I did good service, for I was the inhabited by a stalwart, gray-headed strongest man in the regiment, and I had a beautiful 'bolo' with a blade 14 wife. I had the honor of becoming inches long and as broad as your grace's hand; and on the back of the blade I filed a notch for every More I killed with it. It was a beautiful bolo, and the Spanish officers offered me many pesos for it, but I would not sell it, for it had belonged to my father, and he had carved the hilt as none but he could carve hilts of bolos When we returned to Manila there were nine notches in the back of the blade, and I was a corporal, for it does not suit Filipinos to fight as the Span tards fight, by shooting at great dis tances, and we used to leave the white soldiers far behind and wait for them to come up after the fighting was over.

"For good conduct I was transferred into the Guardia Civil of Manila, and as a guardia, I served many years. had been married, and we had on son, and he was more than the ido and joy of his mother's heart,-for my wife is a Visayan, and the love of a Visayan woman for her first-born is beyond the knowledge of a man. He grew to be like me in strength and stature, a marvel among men, and I was proud of him, and prouder yet to see how my mujer gloried in and loved him for his strength and size, for It made him like me-me, a member of the ever-to-be-trusted Guardia Civil. with my Mindanao medal to wear at the fiestas.

"And at last he, our Jose, was enlisted in the infantry as I had been and my mujer wept as she stood beside me and saw him march in the ranks, from pride that her 'muchacho' was the tallest man in the line, and his shoulders were those of a man and a balf.—and a Visavan woman seldom weeps. But I, I who had been a soldier, did not weep, though I felt sad and doubtful, for I knew that the Spanish officers were not as they had been in my day, and that there was discontent among the lines. But i gave him my bolo to wear and use,the one with the nine notches in the back of the blade, senor, with the hilt which had been carved by my father. "We saw him but seldom after that and knew not where he was stationed for the infantry soldier in the service of Spain has little time but to serve her, and then rejoice because another day had gone and the end of his service was nearer.

"Then came the mutiny. Your grace the same and capture the city. But bridal pair were not to be found. your grace, perhaps, does not know that it was through the Guardia Civil belo-and some 'loco' among the mutineers had told a friend who was a guardia. And when the rocket went up from Cavite, the troops in Manila had been disarmed, and we, with the white troops, were on our way to Ca-

"When we lauded, the mutineers had fled and were hiding, but they had done their work, and when I saw itah, senor, the poor white senoras and little children!-my blood became like the hot yellow wine which the Ingleses drink with soda-water, and I cared not that the mutineers were my countrymen or that the bodies were those o Spanish. Our hearts cried out for vengeance, and we obeyed the orders to enter every nipa-hut in Cavite and drive our bayonets through the floorfor it was under them that the mu tineers were hiding-and the scars of our bayonets are there in the buts of Cavite to-day. I entered two huts and thrust my bayonet through the floor of each until the screams below had ceased. Then I entered a third, and thrust, and there were no screams, but a hand with a bolo came up through the floor and gashed my leg. as your grace sees. I put my foot on the bolo and thrust again with all my great strength; and then the hand relaxed and the fingers opened and shut and tore at the bamboo strips on the floor like a cat's claws-and I saw that the bolo had nine notches in the back of the blade and that the handle had been carved by my father.

"Our son, the pride and joy of his mother's heart-a Visayan woman's heart, senor-was burled in the ditch in Cavite with the others, and I. his father, who had loved him and killed him-I placed him in it-for I was a member of the Guardia Civil,

"That Is the cause, senor, of the scar on my leg, and also the cause of my not resenting the insuits from my mujer; for I had killed her firstborn and destroyed her joy in life. The insults of a woman to a man are but litle to the loss of her first-born to a Visayan woman; and If she can bear her loss the better that I should bear in meekness what she says or does to me in her anger, may we both live a must be laughed at it would be better thousand years."

The conductor both couples were to be given a bot time on the wedding night by their friends, concluded they would not only escape the intended attentions by delay, but have an opportunity to join in what was in store for the Syplmx-Southworth pair. The latter couple had no choice but to be married on time or recall the invitations. They decided to come to the scratch, but to put in practice a plan for outwitting

Miss Southworth's wedding took place in her father's home, situated at the end of a long block of stone front houses on one of the principal dwelling streets of the city. The ceremony was to take place at 10 o'clock, and the bride and groom gave out that they would take an 11 o'clock train for parts which they declined to mention to any one whatever. An automobile was to be in waiting to take them to the station with a chauffeur they could trust implicity, for he was a brother of the groom

An enthusiastic number of friends attended the wedding, including Mr. Hughes and Miss Hickox. The cere mony had been performed, the bride's health had been drunk in the supper room, and the couple went upstairs to and sometimes his mother would get on wraps preparatory to their degrieve because he was not there with parture. A dozen automobiles stood ready without, armed with tin horns.
